Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Cut the stem scar out of ripe tomatoes and dice them very small with a sharp knife; tiny pieces let the flavours come together. Tip into a bowl. 0:59
2. Finely chop the white onion, about a quarter of the tomato weight. Rinse it in a sieve under cold running water and shake dry; this tames its harsh bite and keeps it crisp. 3:06
3. Mince the serrano (keep the seeds and veins for heat, or remove them for a milder salsa) and thinly slice the coriander, stems and all. Add both to the bowl. 5:06
4. Season with a scant teaspoon of salt and a good squeeze of fresh lime, stir and taste. If you have time, let it sit for about an hour so the flavours meld, then re-season. 8:32

> Tip Makes about 2 cups; serves 4 (our estimate). Yucatán-style xnipec: rinsed red onion, ½ habanero instead of serrano, ½ cup chopped radish and a splash of orange juice with the lime.
