Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Soak the poppy and mustard seeds in water for 30 minutes, drain, and grind them to a smooth paste with one green chilli. 0:55
2. Rub the fish with 5 g salt and ½ tsp turmeric. 1:20
3. Heat the mustard oil in a kadai until very hot, then lightly fry the fish in batches, about 2 minutes a side. Set aside, keeping a little oil back to finish. 2:10
4. In the same oil, temper the nigella seeds, then fry the onion gently for 5 minutes. Add the garlic for 2 minutes, then the tomato and 8 g salt and cook until the tomato melts; stir in the sugar. 3:08
5. Add ½ tsp turmeric and the chilli powder and cook until the oil separates. Stir in the mustard-poppy paste for no more than a minute (longer turns it bitter), then pour in the hot water. 4:25
6. When it boils, add the slit green chillies, slide in the fish one piece at a time and simmer on medium for about 5 minutes. Finish with a drizzle of raw mustard oil and turn off the heat. 5:00

> Tip Serve with plain rice. Fry the fish only lightly so it stays moist; any firm freshwater fish works. Mustard oil is traditional; heat it until it just smokes to mellow it.
