Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Melt 1 stick butter in a large nonstick frying pan over medium-low heat. Before it has fully melted, pour in the 32 oz egg whites and add ½ tsp salt. 1:23
2. Cook slowly, stirring and breaking the whites into small crumbs and turning the heat down if they set too fast. Keep going until all the watery liquid has cooked off and they look dry and crumbly, but don't let them brown. 2:58
3. For the toasted gelatin, stir 2 tsp gelatin in a dry pan over medium heat until golden. Put it in a high-powered blender with the cream cheese, mozzarella, sour cream, parmesan, 1 tbsp plain gelatin and the white pepper. 4:54
4. Tip the hot egg whites and all their buttery fat on top. Blend, starting on low and pushing the mixture into the blades, adding heavy cream a few tablespoons at a time, only as much as it needs to start moving, then slowly raise the speed. 6:53
5. Taste and add the rest of the salt, then add 1½ tbsp egg white powder and blend again until thick, smooth and free of lumps. 8:37
6. Spoon into a bowl and serve straight away. The cook finishes it his grandma's way: a well in the middle filled with 2 tbsp melted butter (optional). 9:33

> Tip The cook adds ⅛ tsp garlic powder with the egg whites (optional; left out here to keep it carnivore). He suggests 6–8 servings; serves 7 is our middle figure. Don't add the egg white powder if you'll bake the mash into another dish.
