Vegetarian · Gluten-free ingredients · No nuts listed

A serve gives about 23 g of protein and nearly half a day's calcium, mostly from the paneer; nearly a kilo of tomatoes with capsicum and onion adds plenty of vitamin C, and there are about 8 g of fibre. It is rich in ghee, so keep to one serve.

Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Dry-roast the Kashmiri chillies, 2 tsp cumin seeds, coriander seeds, fennel seeds and peppercorns on low heat until fragrant. Cool and grind coarsely: this is the kadhai masala. 0:51
2. Cut the capsicum, 1 onion, 2 tomatoes and the paneer into triangles (or cubes). Chop the onion trimmings and tomato cores with the remaining onions and tomatoes for the gravy. 1:43
3. Heat 4–5 tbsp ghee, add 1 tsp cumin seeds and the chopped onions and cook until light golden. Add the garlic and chopped ginger and cook until the onions are golden brown. 4:45
4. Lower the heat, add the turmeric, chilli powder, coriander powder, 3 tbsp kadhai masala and green chillies with a splash of hot water, and cook until the ghee separates. 5:24
5. Add the chopped tomatoes and salt, mash lightly and cook on medium for 20–30 minutes until thick and the ghee separates, adding hot water whenever it gets dry. 5:55
6. In a wok, heat 1 tbsp ghee and toss the vegetable triangles on high heat for a minute. Add the paneer, a pinch of salt and 1 tbsp kadhai masala and toss gently. 7:23
7. Fold in the gravy with the coriander and ginger juliennes and cook 1–2 minutes. Stir in the cream (optional) and kasuri methi and finish with more coriander. 8:00

> Tip Serves 4–5 (we use 5). Leave out the cream for a lighter dish. Cut the paneer and vegetables into cubes if you prefer; the taste is the same. Serve with roti or naan.
