Moules Marinière (Mussels in White Wine)

25 min · Serves 2 · 333 kcal a serve · Video 7:13 · French Cooking Academy

Pescatarian · Gluten-free ingredients · No nuts listed

Mussels are lean and nutrient-dense: each serve gives about 27 g protein, many times the daily vitamin B12, plus around 8 mg iron and plenty of selenium, with only 10 g butter in the whole pot.

Diet notes: Paleo with a swap: ghee instead of the unsalted butter, leave out the double cream.

Allergens found in the listed ingredients: Molluscs, Milk, Celery, Sulphites. Worked out from the ingredient list, not tested. Stock, sauces, spice mixes and other packaged foods can contain allergens, so always read the labels on what you buy. If you have a food allergy, don't rely on this.

Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Scrape or snip off any beards and seaweed from the mussels, and discard any that are broken or stay open when tapped. 1:50
2. Blitz the garlic, shallot, parsley and celery in a small food processor (or chop very finely) to a coarse paste. 1:35
3. Melt the butter in a large pot over low heat and gently sweat the herb paste with the thyme and bay leaf until fragrant. 2:52
4. Tip in all the mussels and toss to coat. Turn the heat to high, pour in the wine and bring to the boil, stir once, cover and cook 5–6 minutes until the shells open. 3:38
5. Lift the mussels into a serving bowl. Stir the cream (if using) into the juices for a minute, season if needed and pour over the mussels. 4:58

> Tip Serves 2 as a starter (as the cook says); double it for a main. Serve with toasted baguette, or with fries the Belgian way. Skip the cream for a lighter, classic broth.

The method is a summary in our words — the video shows every step.
