40 min · Serves 4 · 835 kcal a serve · Video 15:01 · Vincenzo's Plate

No nuts listed

Chickpeas blended into a cream make the sauce rich without cream, and pasta with a legume gives each bowl about 16 g of fibre and nearly 30 g of protein in one pot.

Diet notes: Vegan if you leave out the pecorino; Vegetarian with a vegetarian hard cheese instead of the pecorino (traditionally made with animal rennet); Low saturated fat (6 g, 6% of the energy); No dairy if you leave out the pecorino.

Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Drain and rinse the chickpeas, keeping the two cans separate. Blend one can with 2–4 tbsp olive oil and 2–3 tbsp water into a smooth cream. Crush the tomatoes. 1:01
2. Warm 4–5 tbsp olive oil in a large pot over low heat; add the finely chopped carrot and onion with the bay leaves and rosemary sprig. Cover and cook 5 minutes. 2:29
3. Add the crushed garlic and 2 tbsp water, cover and cook 5 more minutes. Strip the rosemary leaves into the pot and discard the stem. 3:47
4. Stir in the crushed tomatoes and the whole chickpeas and season lightly with salt and pepper. Fish out the bay leaves. 5:05
5. Add the dry pasta and stir to coat, then add a mug of water and cook over higher heat like a risotto, stirring and adding a second mug as needed, for about 10 minutes. 6:37
6. When the pasta is nearly al dente stir in the chickpea cream (plus a splash of water) and cook 2–3 minutes until creamy, not runny. Off the heat, stir in pecorino if using and top with chopped rosemary. 9:37

> Tip Use wholewheat ditalini for extra fibre and skip the pecorino to keep it vegan. Keep stirring so the pasta does not stick, and add water a little at a time.

The method is a summary in our words — the video shows every step.
