Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Peel the tomatoes: dip them in boiling water for 12–15 seconds, then straight into cold water. Slip off the skins, halve them top to bottom, scoop out the seeds and slice. 0:18
2. Roast the peppers whole in the oven at 400°F until the skins are almost black, then shut them in a freezer bag so the steam loosens the skins. Peel, seed and cut into strips. 0:44
3. Cut the chicken into pieces (legs and breasts each split into a bone-in and a boneless piece) so everyone gets some of each. 1:08
4. Dust the chicken lightly with flour, tap off the excess and brown it in the olive oil in a wide sauté pan. Lift it out. 1:38
5. In the same pan soften the onion for 2–3 minutes, then add the peppers, tomatoes, thyme, bay, garlic and the small chilli. Season lightly, cover and simmer for 12–15 minutes over medium heat until soft. 1:53
6. Stir in the piment d'Espelette and white wine, return the chicken, cover and simmer gently for about 30 minutes until cooked through. 2:23
7. Lift out the chicken and reduce the sauce until it coats a spoon, then spoon it back over the chicken. 2:37

> Tip Serves 4. Traditionally served with steamed potatoes or rice; green beans or a salad keep it lower in carbs. If you are not used to Espelette pepper, add a little and more at the end.

The method is a summary in our words, in English — the video (in French) shows every step.
