- [ ] a little oil, to coat the plantains for roasting (about 1 tbsp)
- [ ] a little gari (toasted cassava granules), to garnish

Amounts in metric units, converted from the cook's and rounded — the video has the originals.

Allergens found in the listed ingredients: none. Worked out from the ingredient list, not tested. Stock, sauces, spice mixes and other packaged foods can contain allergens, so always read the labels on what you buy. If you have a food allergy, don't rely on this.

Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Soak the black-eyed peas in cold water for about 2 hours (or overnight), then drain and boil in fresh water for 30–45 minutes until soft. Season with a little salt. 0:57
2. Heat the red palm oil in a pan and fry the chopped onion until caramelised, then stir in the tomato paste. 5:14
3. Add the tomatoes, garlic, ginger and the whole, pricked scotch bonnets (chop them for more heat) and fry for 5–10 minutes until the tomatoes break down. 5:50
4. Pour in the stock and the beans and simmer gently for about 30 minutes, until saucy and the red oil rises to the top. 6:26
5. Meanwhile peel and slice the plantains, season with salt, coat lightly with oil and roast in the oven for 10–15 minutes until golden (the cook also offers deep-frying). 6:51
6. Take out the scotch bonnets if you left them whole, then serve the stew with the plantains and a sprinkle of gari. 7:55

> Tip Time excludes soaking. Short of time? Use canned black-eyed peas (the cook says 1 can; 2 × 400 g cans match the dried amount). No red palm oil? The cook suggests coconut oil.

The method is a summary in our words — the video shows every step.
