Hours of simmering turns plain beef bones into a rich, milky broth; with the brisket each bowl gives about 37 g of protein and is a good source of zinc and vitamin B12, with no added fat once the broth is skimmed.

Diet notes: Carnivore if you leave out the green onions; Low carb (1.9 g net carbs) but not keto: 42% of the energy is from fat, and keto meals get about 60% or more.

Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Soak the marrow bones and brisket in cold water for at least 1 hour (or overnight) to draw out the blood, then drain and rinse. 0:25
2. Cover the bones with cold water, bring to the boil and boil 5–10 minutes. Drain, rinse off all the scum and wash the pot. 0:35
3. Return the bones and brisket with 3.3–3.8 L of water. Bring to the boil, cover and keep at a steady medium boil for 1–1½ hours, until the brisket is tender. Lift out the beef, cool it and refrigerate. 1:05
4. Keep boiling the bones for another 5–6 hours, topping up with boiling water once or twice so about 2.8 L stays in the pot, until the broth is glossy and milky white. Strain it. 2:07
5. Cool the broth completely and chill it overnight, then lift off the layer of solid fat. 3:12
6. Reheat the broth, slice the brisket thinly and put it in bowls. Ladle the hot broth over, season at the table with salt and pepper, and scatter green onions on top if you like. 3:54

> Tip Serves 4–6 per the cook; we use 6 bowls of about 470 ml. Time leaves out the overnight chill. The cook serves it with glass noodles, rice and radish kimchi; skip those to keep it carnivore. Freeze spare broth.
