Baking instead of deep-frying keeps the oil to a brushing, and each serve of three patties gives about 12 g of plant protein and 10 g of fibre plus lots of folate, with fresh herbs adding vitamin K.

Diet notes: Low saturated fat (1 g, 4% of the energy).

Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. The day before, soak the dried chickpeas (about 18 hours) in plenty of water with the baking soda. Drain and dry well; a chickpea should split easily when pressed. 0:14
2. Pulse the chickpeas in a food processor with the parsley, cilantro, dill, onion, garlic, salt, pepper, coriander, cumin and cayenne, in stages, until finely ground and cohesive but not a smooth paste. 1:56
3. Transfer to a bowl, mix in the chickpea flour and baking powder, cover and chill for 1 hour. 5:18
4. Stir in the sesame seeds if using. Heat the oven to 180°C and lightly oil a large baking tray. 6:08
5. Shape about 2-tablespoon portions into loose patties without packing them hard, set on the tray and brush the tops with olive oil. 6:33
6. Bake about 8–10 minutes until the undersides are golden, flip, brush with a little more oil and bake 7–12 minutes more until browned. Serve in pita or with salad and tahini. 7:42

> Tip Start a day ahead: the time shown does not include the overnight soak. Freeze uncooked patties on a tray, then bag them; bake straight from frozen. Canned chickpeas will fall apart, so use soaked dried ones.
