Method

TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Peel the garlic (soaking the cloves in cold water for an hour loosens the skins), halve each clove, pull out the green germ so the sauce isn't bitter, and cut the halves into small chunks. 3:03
2. Put the garlic in a tall jug that just fits a stick (immersion) blender, then add the lemon juice, oil, salt and ice-cold water all at once. 3:27
3. Set the blender head flat on the bottom of the jug and run it for about 10 seconds without moving it, so it pulls in a little oil at a time and starts to emulsify with the garlic. 3:42
4. Once it turns thick and white, lift the blender slowly to work in the rest of the oil until the toum is fluffy and holds its shape on a spoon, like a thick mayonnaise. 3:52
5. Spoon into a jar and refrigerate; the raw garlic bite mellows over a few days. If it stays runny, blend in 2 tbsp of chickpea liquid (aquafaba) to bring it together. 4:01

> Tip Keeps in an airtight jar in the fridge for up to 4 weeks. Serve with grilled chicken, kebabs or roast vegetables, or thin with lemon juice as a dressing. The video also shows a double batch made in a food processor.
