No sugar or sweetener at all — just cream and egg yolks, so a half-cup scoop has only about 2 g of carbohydrate. It is rich, though: about 240 kcal and 24 g of fat a scoop, with a good share of a day's vitamin A.

Diet notes: Keto (2 g net carbs a serve).

Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Half-fill a large bowl with ice cubes, scatter about ½ cup of any cheap salt over the ice and mix (the salt only makes the ice colder; it doesn't go in the ice cream). Nest a smaller metal bowl in the ice to chill. 1:48
2. Separate the eggs, keeping the 5 yolks. Pour the cream into the cold metal bowl and add the yolks. 2:20
3. Beat on the mixer's lowest speed for about 10 minutes (about 15 minutes by hand with a whisk) until thick, whipped and stiff enough to hold its shape when you lift the beaters. 2:46
4. Cover both bowls with a tea towel and put the whole ice-bath set-up in the freezer for 45 minutes. 3:25
5. Take it out and beat again for 5 minutes (about 7 by hand) to break up the ice crystals; this keeps the ice cream smooth. 3:39
6. Spoon into a lidded container, or press plastic wrap onto the surface, and freeze 2 hours for soft-serve or about 4 hours for firm scoops. 4:03

> Tip The yolks stay raw: use very fresh or pasteurised eggs, and pasteurised ones for children, pregnancy or older people. The cook says 4 yolks gives a lighter result. Serves is our estimate (8 half-cup scoops).
