A quick stir-fry built on lean lamb leg: one serve gives about 24 g of protein and is rich in vitamin B12, zinc and iron, with garlic, ginger and plenty of fresh coriander.

Diet notes: Gluten-free with a swap: Use tamari instead of soy sauce and dry sherry instead of Shaoxing wine to keep it gluten-free.

Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Toss the lamb cubes with the soy sauce, Shaoxing wine and salt and leave to marinate for 20 minutes (or refrigerate overnight). Mix the cumin, chilli flakes, sugar and Sichuan pepper in a small bowl. 0:38
2. Drain any liquid from the lamb, then add the cornstarch a little at a time, tossing until every piece is lightly coated. 1:46
3. Heat 3 tbsp of the oil in a large skillet over medium-high heat. Spread the lamb in one layer and sear without moving for about 1 minute until golden, flip and cook 30–40 seconds more, leaving it pink inside. Lift onto a plate. 2:00
4. Add the last tablespoon of oil with the dried chillies, ginger and garlic and stir until fragrant. Add the onion and cook about 1 minute, until just starting to soften. 2:40
5. Return the lamb, scatter over the spice mix and toss at once to coat. Take the pan off the heat, taste and add salt if needed, then stir through the coriander and serve hot, topped with sesame seeds if you like. 2:57

> Tip Serve with steamed rice or noodles and a green vegetable. The dried chillies flavour the oil; most people push them aside rather than eat them.
